GENERAL DESCRIPTION

The elevation above sea level in the township ranges from approximately 2650 feet in the northwestern portion of the township to approximately 2400 feet in the southeastern portion of the township. The southeastern portion of the township contains rough mountains with elevation approaching 3500 feet. The western portion of the township contains the foothills of the Funeral Mountains. The rest of the township is nearly level with general drainage to the southeast.

No springs, flowing streams, or other water sources were observed during the course of the survey. Vegetation consists of creosote and cacti.

The area has a history of mining with evidence of old mining claims visible throughout the township. No active mining was observed during the course of this survey.

Access is provided by a variety of bladed and trail roads. The northerly access to the Big Dune recreation area runs through the northeastern portion of the township.

There are no settlers living within the township.
